The Pastor Speaks

After R. A. Torrey had become a widely known evangelist, he made the following statement: "I grew up in a godly home, but I was ungodly. I reached young manhood ungodly, unsaved, and careless about the things of the soul. I then went away from home an unsaved man. But I went away with my mother's words ringing in my ears: "Reuben, when the hour is dark, son, call upon God, call upon God!"

"I wandered far, farther than I had ever dreamed I could wander, Then one night in a hotel room, I planned to commit suicide. As I made all the preparations, there came flashing the words of his mother. Then in the depths of despair, I knelt by my bed and called upon God. Instead of taking my own life, I gave my life to the Lord Jesus."

My wife and I are the parents of four children. How strong is the influence - whether good or evil - of a father and a mother on their children! We realize this tremendous influence. It says in Philipians 2:5, "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." Parents influence will always be good as they have the mind of Christ. It will be shown in the following ways:

Parents will put God first in their lives, their children will be urged to give Him priority, too.

As parents trust in God grows, their hunger for fellowship with God will deepen. Then the children will seek spiritual progress.

Parents will consistently pray for their children. I pray for my children out loud so they will hear me during our family worship. Our children may forget some of the precepts or prohibitions they received from us, but the influence of prayer is never lost.

When the influence of parents on their children follows the teachings of the Bible, parents need not fear what will ever happen to their children. The influence of a Christian father or mother will last forever.

Prayer: Our Father, thank you for Christian families in Appomattox and around the world. May their influence help and bring healing to the broken-hearted. In Jesus Name, Amen.

The judge pounded his gavel for court to come to order, then turned to the woman in the witness box.

"The witness will please state her age," he ordered, "after which she will be sworn in."

Comment on the International Sunday School lesson for May 27, 1973.

Topic: Christ Is Our Hope.

Scripture: Acts 1:6-11; 2 Timothy 2:8-13; 1 Peter 1:3-9; 1 John 3:1-3.

The saying is sure: If we have died with him, we shall also live with him: if we endure, we shall also reign with him. 2 Timothy 2:11-12.

In his remarkable essay on love, Paul contrasts the impermanence and transitory character of prophecy and tongues, so highly esteemed as religious practices, and of knowledge, so assiduously sought after in educaton, with the permanence of faith, hope, and love. The three are intimately related: hope is confident expectation, built upon the foundation of faith, which is belief, and in turn hope nourishes faith; both find practical expression in love. All three are fundamental in Christian doctrine and practice.

Ultimately Christian faith will become sight, Christian hope reality, and Christian love will receive the Father's approbation for serving Him in ministering to His little ones.

Hope is essential to life, for it is one of the characteristics God has implanted in those creatures made in His image. If one could not hope, life would not be life, but drab, dull, dark existence. "I live on hope," wrote Robert Bridges, "and that I think do all who come into this world." The hope of tomorrow and its opportunity, though by no means certain, is the best remedy for a disappointing and an unsatisfactory today. Hope is one of the strongest motivations to work and to play, to plant and to reap, to have faith and to be faithful and to love, both in its more intimate personal connotations and in its broader spiritual connotations.

Hope is both secular and spiritual. Hardly any task a person undertakes is not undertaken in hope--in the expectation that the task will ultimately bring a return to him who undertakes it. In the darkest hours of human history, often in the bleakest moments of personal sorrow and despair, man has gone about his work in the hope that tomorrow will be better. Not only is hope encouraged by the faith of the Judaeo-Christian tradition, it is also nurtured by the experience of life. General Lee, who knew as well as any what it is to experience defeat in human affairs, said that "it is history that teaches us to hope."

In the spiritual life, hope is particularly vital and motivating. It is hope of eventually living throughout eternity in companionship with the Father which motivates continuing commitment to God. It is the hope of this ultimate blessing, providing a pleasure beyond the capacity of the human mind to conjecture, which motivates a person to take Christ as Lord and Savior and to live according to the teachings of the Incarnate Son.

What basis is there for such hope? Christ is the basis, and in His assurance is the foundation on which hope is built. Because He rose from the dead, the believer has the confidence that he, too, will experience eternal life. Because the resurrection of Jesus Christ furnishes the basis for man's hope in eternal life, it was integral to the apostles' preaching and should be integral to all Christian preaching. The certainty of Christ's resurrection- "in fact Christ has been raised from the dead," Paul wrote with the certainty of a historian recording a known, provable event- makes hope in the realization of Christ's promises a certain and confident expectation.

Spiritual hope contrasts with secular hope in its certainty. We do not know what any day, even today, will bring, we say truthfully. Man's work is uncertain, because life is uncertain; no one knows whether he will finish any task he undertakes, but this uncertainty is the poorest of reasons for not undertaking work. But man's hope in Christ is certain, for Christ is faithful and dependable and sure and in His resurrection has given the earnest of the fulfillment of His promises.
